

Bring Books to Life

Open the doors to learning and adventure with a visit to your local library. Membership is usually free and children can select from hundreds of books.

Families bring books to life when they:

TALK about the book before, during and after reading

READ the story with funny voices or gestures

PLAY by acting out the story or making something together

Stone Soup

by Marcia Brown

In this classic story, hungry travelers come to a village. They have nothing but an empty cooking pot. Find out how the clever travelers get the villagers to donate food to make "stone soup."

Booking and Cooking

Suggest to your child that you make stone soup together.

Discuss the steps to make the soup and ask your child questions. What vegetables went into the soup in the book?

Ask your child to point out the vegetables in the book. You can point to their names. Do you like those vegetables? Have you eaten one of these?

No one would really eat a stone. What vegetable sort of looks like a stone? Would you rather eat a potato?

Make a shopping list together.

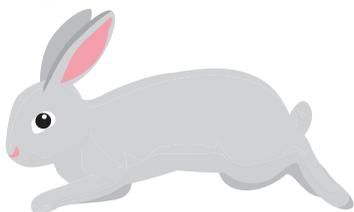

Children enjoy imitating adults. Your child may want to make his own list.

Go to the store together. Let your child help select the vegetables and prepare the soup. As you work, talk about story. Were the travelers good people or cheaters?

Making lists, organizing and following the steps of cooking remind your child of the story and help his memory develop. He also learns math concepts. And, you had a special time together!

The Runaway Bunny

by Margaret Wise Brown

A little bunny is bored with life at home. He decides to run away. Mother Bunny has a plan to bring him home.

Tell the Story Together

Children often want to read the same book over and over. Ask your child questions as you read along. Or ask her to tell you the story using the pictures as a guide.

Or make up your own story using the book as a guide. For instance:

If you are a fish, then I will become a (fill in the blank).

Act Out the Story

Pretend your child's stuffed animals are having the conversation in the book. No bunnies? No problem. Use the story to ask silly questions of the stuffed animals or other toys in the room. It might go something like:

You're not a bunny! What kind of animal are you? Are you a fish? Are you a bird? A flower? Are you a child?

What is learned from all of this reading and play?

Your child feels that he is important to you. You shared a book and had a conversation. You did something together!

Visit our Family Resource Library for more activities that help develop literacy.

better beginnings

EVERY CHILD DESERVES OUR BEST

See the next page for more great books and learning activities.

Click here to visit our Resource Library. You'll find activities and tips to help you prepare your child for life.

ARBetterBeginnings.com • 1-800-445-3316